Attorney Lebbeus P. Crigler of Crigler & Leahy, legal advisers of Trustee Maguire, and the father dropped them, one by one, from the window and into the arms of neighbors. Five of them were rescued in this way, although all were more or less required to arrive at an exact understanding as to the company's affairs. He mild he felt certain that the liabilities would not exceed the estimate made by Mr. Hayden.

The company was organized last January to do a general stock and grain commission business. Sledge, whose home was in Memphis, J. J. Mulholland, Lucius C. Owens and C. E. Hayden composed the company. In January at rescription of the company and retired the window and dropped safely to the ground.

The mother had not returned, and the father started in search of her. He was running madly through the smoke-filled house when firemen, at last arriving, found him. They attempted to lead him to the window, but he fought them off. The firemen had to struggle valiantly to drag him to the window, and a moment after they had started down the ladder with him the flound. It was evident that they had become choked and blinded by the smoke and were unable to find their way from the journey.

PRISONER'S FORT A HOUSE TOP. London Jail Bird Held Position

Against Wardens for 36 Hours.

London, Dec. 6.-A convict at the Penton wille prison managed to elude the warders established himself on the roof of the institution, and for thirty-six hours defied all attempts to dislodge him.

He was finally starved into submission.

Thousands of spectators watched the show and aided the prisoner by timely warnings of the movement of his would-be captors.

Ladders placed against the wall were promptly thrown down by the occupant of the roof, whose reckless movements and wild laughter at the futile efforts of the warders indicated insanity. The fugitive collected a large pile of slates, which he gleefully threw at the heads of the officials until they were forced to retreat.

Women and Men, Unable to Gain Admittance to Courtroom, Linger About Outside of Building.

The Republic Bureau, 18th St. and Pennsylvania Ave.

Washington, Dec. 6.-A remarkable scene occurred this afternoon outside the main entrance to the Criminal Court, where the Bonine murder trial is being held. Fully 200 persons crowded about the door after the courtroom was filled. Men and women who were unable to gain admittance stood there in the cold, and their laughter and boisterous actions could be heard a block away. One might have thought that they were bound for a river excursion, rather than a courtroom where a woman was being tried

The crowd within was composed in the main, of women. They forced themselves forward when possible and occupied seats of vantage.

Attraction for Morbid Element. The probability of a continuance of the offensive testimony brought out on yesterday and which was unfit for printing, was what attracted such a morbid element. Every question and answer was watched with breathless interest, Mrs. Bonine evinced less Interest in to-day's proceedings than on any day since she was placed on trial. At one time, when there was a brief delay, waiting for diagrams of the several floors of the Kenmore Hotel, which were later placed in evidence, the defendant turned to her counsel and entered into earnest conversation. As on other days, members of Congres and other distinguished persons were among the spectators, several of whom at different times occupied seats on the bench beside Justice Anderson. There is a probability that the examination of witnesses will be closed to-morrow.

Merchants and Manufacturers to Depart After Christmas.

Another party of excursionists composed of prominent St. Louis manufacturers and merchants will visit the South after Christmas in the interests of St. Louis business and the World's Fair. The trip will be made under the auspices of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Excursion Association. Last month they invaded Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi with such good results that the second Southern trip has been projected, "The South," said a prominent manufacturery yesterday, "is the territory where St. Louis could be strongest, but which has been lamentably neglected. Retallers down there are still buying largely from New York. Since making the trip to Mississippi three weeks ago, I have been deluged with letters from persons with whom I left my cards. I put a salesman on the road there immediately. His success has been something wonderful. Southern trade is a birt-right of this city, and we propose to get it." Soon after returning from the excursion of November a number of the men, who had become impressed with the opportunity for St. Louis trade in the South, met at 'ne Mercantile Club to discuss the feasibility of a second expedition west of the Mississippi River. A committee of five was appointed to work up interest. Nearly all the former excursionists have agreed to make the second trip, and many others have been enlisted.
